IV. A New Treatiſe of CHYMISTRY, &c. written in French by Chriſtopher Glaſer, and now faithfully Engliſhed by F. R. S. London, 1677. in 8°.

THis Author having reflected upon the cauſes, why many have declaimed againſt Chymical Writers and even againſt Chymiſtry it ſelf, maketh it his buſineſs in this Treatiſe to publiſh a ſhort and eaſie method for the happy attainment of all the moſt neceſſary preparations of Chymiſtry; aſſuring us, that the conſidering Reader ſhall find therein nothing tedious, ſuperfluous, or defective in any matter that deſerves to be known, and that, though indeed the Preparations of all Chymical matters cannot be found therein, yet ſufficient Examples of them will be had from it; affirming withal, that he hath deliver'd no operation, but what he has made and well experienced himſelf, and what any one, following the Rules by him preſcribed, may do after him.

As for the Theory, he ſpeaks ſuccinctly, yet ſeems to ſay ſo much of it as may ſuffice for direction to the Preparations: performing his operations on Minerals, Vegetables, and Animals, and proceeding therein orderly, without omitting any neceſſary directions.

Advertiſement.
